2-6 December 2024, online via Zoom

Following the successful conclusion of the recent Group of Governmental Experts (GGE) on further practical measures for PAROS and its adoption of a consensus report, the international community seeks to further work towards ensuring that space security is achieved at a time where humankind's reliance on space systems and services is increasingly critical. States and other stakeholders will gather in an upcoming Open-Ended Working Group (OEWG) on the prevention of an arms race in outer space in all its aspects, and to contribute to the success of this Group, as well as other future initiatives, the United Nations Institute for Disarmament Research (UNIDIR) invites representatives from all regional groups to participate in a Space Security Regional Briefing series.

These briefings will explore contemporary space security issues, as well as recent multilateral processes, providing a necessary background to understand the current state of the debate. The briefings will also provide insight into the upcoming OEWG, highlighting key concerns that the debates of the gathering will seek to cover.

The briefing series seeks to provide States from all regions with the foundations necessary to build a productive debate and foster the common understanding needed for effective and long-lasting measures to address space security concerns.
